4	I agree that big companies have a positive effect on society. There are two major areas where this effect can be seen: the economy and work-life balance. Large companies generate huge amounts of money, both for national economies and for the global economy as a whole. Developing countries, in particular, benefit from the extra commerce created by such corporations. Furthermore, governments receive considerable tax sums from these corporations, which can be used to fund public projects. The existence of big companies also leads to better conditions for workers. Large corporations employ thousands of people and are more likely to have the resources to keep their employees satisfied. Offering access to on-site gyms or implementing policies that limit overtime work, for example, significantly improves employees' work-life balance. Therefore, from the broader economic advantages to the individual benefits for workers, the effect that big companies have on society is most certainly positive.
